EVAW Law's Parliamentary Approval to Check Violence

KABUL - Civil society groups and the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC) on Sunday said not approving the Elimination of Violence against Women (EVAW) Law by the parliament could be blamed for the increasing crimes against the gender. The bill was decreed into law through an executive order by former president Hamid Karzai in July 2009, when the parliament was in recess. During such periods, the Constitution allows the president to issue decrees for emergency purposes, but the Constitution also requires such decrees to be forwarded to parliament for approval.

The law criminalises child marriage, selling and buying women to settle disputes, assault and more than a dozen other acts of violence and abuse against women. A gathering "We Support Elimination of Violence against Women' was arranged by the Afghan Civil Society Institutes Network for Peace in Kabul. The participants stressed that the EVAW law should be approved by the parliament. The network's head, Humaira Saqib, said one thing the Afghan women had gained during the past 14 years was the EVA law which needed to be fully enforced. "The Wolesi Jirga has adopted a stance of ignorance about the law, but we want the bill to be approved," she said. Fawzia Kufi, Wolesi Jirga's women commission head, said some women in the ...
