Zazai said he had no comment on the post, but said Helmand would never collapse, while police chief Abul Rahman Sarjang said: "We have strong forces in Helmand. In some places, we leave areas for tactical reasons, but all forces are working together well and very soon we will have major achievements to report."

Ghani's government, backed by billions of dollars in international aid and training assistance from thousands of NATO troops still stationed in Afghanistan, is pushing to re-open talks with the Taliban

Over the past six months, Helmand has been the scene of battles between insurgents and security forces that have complained of being abandoned by the U.S.-backed government.

FOREIGN FORCES

"We don't provide food and ammunition to our forces on time, do not evacuate our wounded and martyred soldiers from the battle field, and foreign forces only watch the situation from their bases and don't provide support," Rasulyar wrote.

Since Thursday, there had been 90 casualties near Gereshk, a junction on Highway 1 near the provincial capital Lashkar Gah, and in Sangin district to the north, a level of losses which was "an everyday issue", Rasulyar added.

He said Sangin was "on the verge of collapse" with 44 casualties overnight.

The Taliban, which has not let a bloody internal leadership battle interrupt its campaign in Helmand, posted statements on its website detailing attacks on checkpoints as well as other operations including a suicide attack against the Gereshk police chief.

With army and police units badly weakened by desertions and lack of supplies, the Taliban has seized the districts of Musa Qalah and Now Zad in the north of the province and has threatened Lashkar Gah.

Government forces said they had recaptured the district of Khanishin on Friday, but by Sunday, the Taliban said it had won back the centre.

Underlining the gravity of the situation, U.S. Special Forces have been reported to have taken part in fighting in Helmand in recent weeks. NATO headquarters in Kabul has not confirmed the reports.

faculties through a board. Criticizing this decision, university lecturers recently held protests and warned they would stop the university entrance exam in Kabul and other provinces if their demands are not met.

Raising this issue, senators on Sunday summoned the Minister of Higher Education to brief them on the law and address the lecturers' demands.

Along with the minister, a number of lecturers wanted to attend the session but they were not allowed to. They were made to wait in the Meshrano Jirga's media center.

"I have met with lecturers three times and I have heard their demands. I have selected a representative for them and we have sent a letter to the Presidential Palace by their request in order to address their demands," the Higher Education Minister Farida Mohmand told the senators.

Meanwhile a number of university lecturers criticized the minister's remarks, and said they have ended their protests but they will restart it if their demands are not met.

"If their [lecturers] demands are not met in the near future they will decide to boycott the university entrance exam - which is a national process," said Amanullah Haqyar, a university lecturer. (Tolonews)

According to him three sections of the TAPI line will create a corridor - which will come under construction soon. In addition a fiber optic network system will also launch soon, he said.

Another new development was the 300 megawatt electric transmission line that will also be launched soon to transfer power from Turkmenistan to Pakistan via Afghanistan.

Touching on other new developments, Ghani said that government will soon release funding for the third phase of the building of the Kamal Khan Dam in Nimroz province.

But going back to the TAPI project, Ghani said the pipeline will change Afghanistan from a conflict zone to an economic zone.

In conclusion he said Afghanistan is rich in natural resources so "let's develop this country".

According to reports, more than 750 kilometers of pipeline will pass through Afghanistan. It will start in Kasht district in Herat province, and make its way through Farah, Nimroz and Helmand, ending up in Kandahar before crossing the border to Quetta in Pakistan and on to India.

The implementation of TAPI will earn Afghanistan up to $500 million USD a year in transit duties and the project will also help Afghanistan purchase 1.5 billion cubic meters of gas for thirty years at a reasonable price. The gas will be utilized in Hajigak iron mine and at the Mes Aynak copper project.

Economic analysts say the implementation of TAPI can leverage extended economic, political and commercial ties within member states, which include Turkmenistan, Pakistan and India. (Tolonews) resumption of talks.

"Until now there is no clear vision for inter-Afghan peace negotiations. So far we do not know who will meet and where and what topic will be discussed," said one HPC member.

"It seems that the process is moving forward more slowly. We expect the talks would be inter-Afghan dialogue and yield positive outcomes," he said.

Meanwhile, Sartaj Aziz Adviser to Pakistani Prime Minister on Foreign Affairs and National Security has said that a joint commission between Kabul and Islamabad is expected to be formed, stating that the talks will resume soon.

Aziz reiterated that Pakistan will play the role of a good mediator in the negotiation process.

The Afghan government also seems to be reluctant to give details of the peace talks.

"It is too early to comment about the formation of a peace delegation and which sides will sit and talk," a deputy presidential spokesman Sayed Zafar Hashemi said.

Former peace negotiators are also not confident about a breakthrough in the talks.

"There is no assurance that these talks will continue with the Taliban," MP Assadullah Saadati said. Islamabad which allegedly wields influence over the Taliban hosted the first round of formal peace talks between the group and the Afghan government in July. However, the talks were deadlocked after Taliban belatedly confirmed the death of the group's longtime leader Mullah Omar in Pakistan, sparking a power struggle among the group's factions.

Ties between Kabul and Islamabad became strained in the aftermath of deadly attacks on Kabul which officials claimed had been planned in Pakistan, asking Islamabad to launch a crackdown against militant groups operating in its soil.

But tensions eased after leaders from both countries met in Paris at the sidelines of the Climate Change conference in November and once again agreed to resume the peace talks. (Tolonews)

This comes after a recent outcry by Kabul residents over the growing piles of trash in the streets of the capital - which is home to more than three million people.

Garbage has not been removed from most parts of the city for months due to an expired contract with the previous service provider.

Earlier this month, the acting mayor of Kabul promised lawmakers at the Wolosi Jirga (Lower House of Parliament) that he would clear the city of garbage within a week. However, two weeks have passed but the garbage has still not been removed.

In addition, President Ashraf Ghani last week vowed to clean up the city together with residents within two weeks, but again there is no sign of such an initiative. (Tolonews)

- leaving hundreds of families displaced.

The radio station reportedly started broadcasting a week ago.

But reports have emerged that the Afghan spy agency - the NDS - has arrested a reporter who allegedly works for the radio station.

"We believe that if actions are not taken against the move, consequences will be enormous to the people. Government has millions of dollars in equipment which is capable of terminating the transmission. So all Afghan intelligence agencies in cooperation with NATO must stop this radio," MujibKhelwatgar, a member of NAI - a group supporting open media in Afghanistan - said on Sunday.

Since its emergence, Daesh has been extremely active in social media in its bid to recruit militants. Reports found that Daesh also has access to equipment which can help the group to establish contacts with its associates in Syria and Iraq.

"We are seriously working with security institutions, because it is a major concern to us. NDS has already arrested one of the journalists affiliated to Daesh radio. The radio operates through mobile equipment, it changes locations whenever we send out troops," the spokesman for the ministry of communication and information technology Yasin Samim said. Residents in Nangarhar said on Sunday that in addition to inflicting security threats, Daesh is also trying to destroy cemeteries and sacred places.

"We want the government to take action soon, because this has a negative impact on the youth in Nangarhar and it strengthens Daesh," Nangarhar resident Mohammad Rassoul said.

"This radio is having a bad impact on the people. Whenever people listen to this, they hear Daesh propaganda and anti-government rhetoric," another resident Mohammad Rassoul said. (Tolonews)
