

Putin, Trump to Soon Talk by Phone: Russia

MOSCOW - Russian President Vladimir Putin is expected to speak to U.S. President Donald Trump by phone in the coming days, the Kremlin said Saturday. Putin will congratulate Trump on his inauguration during the conversation as a "protocol necessity," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov was quoted by RIA Novosti news agency as saying. A meeting between the two leaders will possibly be held in the coming months, rather than coming weeks, said the spokesman, adding that the specific date is expected to be discussed during the phone conversation. As for violent anti-Trump protests, Peskov said Russia opposes meddling in other countries' internal affairs and thus the United States should handle the issue by itself. Trump was sworn in as the 45th U.S. president at an inauguration ceremony held Friday morning at Capitol Hill, overshadowed by occasional rain and violent protests. (Xinhua)

Turkish Parliament Approves Constitutional Changes

ANKARA - Turkish lawmakers approved the bill on 18-article constitutional changes in a final vote early Saturday, Anadolu Agency reported. A total of 339 legislators voted for and 142 against the changes that will now head to a referendum likely to be held in early April. The constitutional changes are expected to lead to dramatically expanded powers of President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. They include Turkey's shifting to a presidential system that requires a simple majority, or 51 percent, in a referendum. The parliament vote came after almost three weeks of debates, which even caused lawmakers to fight each other. Each article was put to a vote in the 550-seat Turkish parliament. At least 330 votes, or a three-fifths majority, are needed to adopt the constitutional change. Turkish Prime Minister Binali Yildirim, leader of the ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP), congratulated lawmakers for passing the constitutional changes. "People will have the final say," he told them. "We have done our job. Now we convey the issue to its real owner, our people." "People's vote will be the most accurate one," said Nationalist

Movement Party (MHP) leader Devlet Bahçeli. "The Turkish nation will do its own evaluation and hopefully it will add to what has been achieved so far." (Xinhua)

Trump to Eliminate Obama's Climate Action Plan: White House Website

WASHINGTON - Shortly after U.S. President Donald Trump was sworn into office Friday, the newly updated White House website said the new administration will eliminate the Climate Action Plan, the centerpiece of former President Barack Obama's climate legacy. "For too long, we've been held back by burdensome regulations on our energy industry," the website said in a page titled "An America First Energy Plan." "President Trump is committed to eliminating harmful and unnecessary policies such as the Climate Action Plan and the Waters of the U.S. rule." It claimed that lifting these restrictions will "greatly help American workers, increasing wages by more than 30 billion U.S. dollars over the next seven years." The rest of the webpage did not mention climate change any more. Trump has called climate change a "hoax" and has threatened to pull the U.S. out of the Paris Agreement that took effect last year. Trump's energy plan said that the U.S. has "vast untapped domestic energy reserves" valued at 50 trillion dollars in total, and that the country

"must take advantage of the revenues from energy production to rebuild our roads, schools, bridges and public infrastructure." (Xinhua)

China's Supply-Side Reform Supports Global Commodity Prices: Russian Industrialist

DAVOS, Switzerland - China's current supply-side reform supports global commodity prices, said Vladislav Soloviev, chief executive officer of Russian aluminum producer RUSAL. "A number of factors bring us to this positive situation," Soloviev said in a recent interview with Xinhua, referring to a significant uplift of aluminum price in 2016. "First of all, there is a quite strong demand in all markets - aerospace, automotive - and we see some recovery of the construction market as well," he said, adding that the expanding demand in the Chinese market was the first factor influencing the price. The CEO predicted that after years of turmoil, the sluggish commodity prices would be improved thanks to China's supply-side reform. "China started to implement real supply reforms in 2016 and throughout the year," Soloviev said. "Those bring all of us in the industry to a healthier situation, when we see the new levels of the prices." RUSAL is a leading global aluminum producer, which operates in 19 countries on five continents. Among the reform measures that Soloviev praised were capacity reductions in the steel, cement, and aluminum industries. In his view, the reductions led ...(More on P4)...(25)
